

Brion-Meisels Clip 7 Transcript

GRETCHEN BRION-MEISELS: OK. Five, four, three, two, one.

So we're going to take a 10 minute break. When we come back from break, I'm going to share four big tensions. We're going to take a 10 minute break. When we come back from break, I'm going to share out four big tensions that come up often in the work. And these are up-- I'm going to tell you a little bit more about them and describe them a little bit more, but the general tensions are on the board.

So if you want to take a quick look at them while you go on break, you can do that. When we come back-- actually, you know what? Sorry. I just made a strategic change in decision. I'm going to tell you a bit about them now. And then, when we come back, I'm going to ask you to go ahead and think about where you want to sit when we come back.

So the first possible tension to be talking about for this last part of class is around building trust and building authentic relationships. And that question is around this notion that building trust and building authentic relationships are key to doing the work as we have up here. And yet those things make both adults and youth vulnerable.